[REDACTED] and several members of his staff, including [REDACTED] to discuss our proposal to acquire additional real estate adjacent to the headquarters building. [REDACTED] on behalf of the Director, Bureau of the Budget, cleared our proposal for discussion with appropriate Congressional committees. (See my Memorandum of Conversation.)

2. I hosted a luncheon for Bill Crockett, Assistant Secretary of State for Administration; Henry Ford, his Deputy for Operations; and Verne Lewis, his Deputy for Budget and Finance.

3. Sherman Kent telephoned me about a man named [REDACTED] He would like to pay his travel and transportation of household effects from the West Coast to [REDACTED] first post of duty, i.e., Washington, D. C. He said that [REDACTED] was an exceptional, rare "bird"; and, in his judgment, we would be just as justified doing this for him as for a scientist. I told him that I thought we could have done it but was not sure that we could do it retroactively. (I agreed to look into it.)

4. Jack Earman was down to talk with me about my memorandum to the Offices of Personnel and Security, the Medical Staff, and the Comptroller concerning the integration of personnel information. He thought that this was a good memorandum but was anxious to put other components on notice that they, too, should feed information into the system pending the beginning of the second phase of the program. (I think he had a good point, and I have undertaken to draft a memorandum for General Carter's signature along these lines.)
